GOVERNOR JOSEPH JENCKES
GOVERNOR RHODE ISLAND
1727—1732

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INDEBTEDNESS

I understand that Mrs. Agnes N. Beede of Pawtucket who has before made valuable contributions to this History, recently called to the attention of Howard W. Chapin, Secretary of the Rhode Island Historical Society of Providence, R. I., that I was getting out a second edition and that she would greatly appreciate it if the Society would send me a half-tone picture of the celebrated painting of Governor Jenks so I could incorporate it in the Histories. He at once complied with a courteous letter to me. I at once sent the half-tone to Jenks Bros. who are Photographers with Studios at Freeport, Ill. and soon they developed and contributed a considerable number of the pictures so that I could enclose one to each subscriber.

Charles N. Jenks.

PREFACE

This is a partial history of the JENKS family, of their ancestry in Wales and later in England, and prior to 1643 A. D. Thence through American History and some family records to about 1900. It is not claimed to be complete, or even approximately so as many collateral lines are missing, due to few or no individual family records having been kept, and with little or no detail. It is intended, however, by the undersigned to offer an opportunity for a member of a family of the name who wish to obtain, or to connect with the direct line to help them do so and to partly understand at least what manner of men and women were their ancestors throughout many centuries past. They will find here names and achievements that have left more than superficial imprints in history and story, and from the very dawn of civilization. It is hoped also that this brief beginning will prove an incentive to family members to a further search for more detailed history and many missing records, and to a final complete genealogy and history of the JENKS family and their forbears.

Charles N. Jenks, brother of William J. Jenks and nephew of J. W. P. Jenks and in the direct line 8th. generation from Joseph Jenks, Sr. 1643.

P. S. Figure before each name indicates the generation in America.

Traced through Welsh ancient manuscripts and seemingly reliable tradition from about the year 150 B. C. to 1350 A. D. and thence by English Heraldry to 1643 and thence by American History to 1910.

The following works were consulted by Prof. John W. P. Jenks during his researches for all information relative to the early history of the JENKS family. This in addition to his exhaustive personal researches in England and Wales seeking all available records of the family.

At the Apprentice Library.

"Letters on Welsh History," by Jenkins. #R2230.

"The Triads," (Welsh) by Samuels. in #R2230.

"History of Wales." by Warrington. #R2894.

"Gleanings Through Wales," by S. J. Pratt, #9140 - P88.

"Archaeologia Britannica," by E. Lhuyd. #420- L61.

Following the above researches in 1890, William J. Jenks then Secretary of the Board of Patent Control of the General Electric Co. of New York City, made an extensive tour of England and Wales, and while there examined carefully many records of Heraldry and works upon Wales bearing upon the history of the Jenks family in England and their ancestry there and in Wales. No one could have been better qualified for this work, and he has repeatedly stated to me that he checked Prof. Jenks' discoveries and statements herein made, and found them generally correct. He further added to previous work by his own discoveries and submitted to the writer a copy of a very old manuscript which he found with several others in the possession of a very old and prominent family in Wales containing a story of the life of Elystan Glodrydd, founder of the family 927-983 and in some detail. This with other material taken from old records adds much of interest to our knowledge of our ancient warrior ancestor, Elystan Glodrydd and his exploits, and final death in battle, - this, through the aid of a Welsh Scholar and interpretor in his employ.

Charles N. Jenks.

The name JENKS is of Welsh origin, signifying son of John, the spelling JENKS first appears in 1550.

Before the time when writing and afterwards printing was used to preserve records and titles to property ownership, genealogies were preserved on a principal of necessity. A man's pedigree was in reality his title deed, by which he claimed his birthright in the country.

Every one was obliged to show his descent through nine generations, in order to be acknowledged a free native, and by which right he claimed his portion of land in the community.

1 AEDD MAWR. Was a follower of Hugh the Mighty, who led the nation the KYMRY over the Hazy Sea, (German Ocean) to Klydaw (Bretagne) and there dwelt. Originally they came from Deffrobani (The present site of Constantinople.)

2 PERDAIN. First established government, and net up royalty in the PRYDAIN isle of Britain. Before him there was no justice, no law but that of the strongest. He was called the "Pillar of the Nation," because he joined all the tribes of Britain in a federation, and by a convention was made monarch of the nation of Kymry and the island was called after him, Ynya, Prydain.

3 DYVNVARTH HEN, or Dyvnwal Moelmud. He framed an equitable system of mutual obligation between societies, princes and countries; so that the violence and lawlessness of princes was subdued, and right and justice obtained to everyone, great or small. He established the Molmutine Laws, long famous among the Saxons as well as in Wales. He was called the third "Pillar of the nation of the Kymry". He married Conwenna. He reigned 40 years and was buried in the Temple of Concord, in the City of Trinovantum.

4 BELI, or Belinus. He enforced his father's laws; built a great causeway with stone and mortar, from the sea of Cornwall to the shores of Caithness also one from Menevia to Hamo's Port.

53 PADARN BEISRUDD. He was ordained as St. Padarn by the Patriarch of Constantinople who gave him a gold embroidered cloak.

54 EDEYRN (female) Wedded Gwawl, Ferch Coel Godeboc, King.

55 CYNEDDA WLEDIG. A king whose reign extended between 340-389 A. D.

56 EINION YRTH. Reigning king between 389-443 A. D.

57 CASWALLON LAW-HIR. Reigned between 443-517 A. D. His sire name signified "Long headed."

58 MAELGWN GWYNEDD. Reigned from 517-560. He possessed all the majestic and graceful attributes of a great sovereign. Besides these personal advantages, his mental sagacity, his courtesy, bounty and valour, attracted general admiration. His military prowess, superior ability and political importance marked his as a fitting Pendragon for resolute men. In early life as a penance for misdeeds he assumed the habit of a monk, but soon broke his vows and resumed his royal rank. A band of slain and unburied marauders caused a plague, and the aged king resumed the habit of a monk and forsaking his palace at Penrhyn and Castle of Tyganwy, shut himself up in the church of Llanrhos, where he died of the malady from which he fled in 566 A. D.

59 RHUN. Was king between 560-586 A. D.

60 BELI. Reigned from 586 to 599 A. D.

61 IAGO. Reigning king between 599-603.

62 CADFAN. His reign began in 603 and in 607 a congress of Britons was held at Chester and elected Cadfan, King of all Britain, he was esteemed as "The wisest and most highly estimated King of Kings". He died in 630.

63 CADWALLON. (The ending is also given as "lan", "lin", "lo".) King from 630-676. He refused to yield homage and tribute to the Angle: vanquished by King Edwin he fled to Ireland, gathered a strong force and returned home; he was slain at the battle of Denisburn in 634 (?). Married a daughter of Pybba, King of Mercia and his second wife was a West Saxon princess.

64 CADWALADER FENDIGAID, surnamed Bhendiged, or the Blessed. He was the noble last King of the British race that enjoyed the title of King of Britain; after him, the Welch, who were the most numerous remains of the Britains. A severe famine and raging pestilence sprung from the continued war, and he fled to his cousin Alan, King of Little Britain in France. While here he had a vision directing him to go to Rome. He did so, was received by Pope Sergius, and entered a monastery where he died in 688. He reigned between 676-688.

65 IDWALLO. Reigned from 688 until his death in 720.

66 RODRI MOLWYNOG or Roderic Malwinnoe, succeeded his father as King, reigning between 720-755.

67 CYNAN TINDAETHWY or Conan Triudoethwy, succeeded his father as King 755-817. He had no son and was succeeded by his daughter.

68 ESSYLLT or Eisylht, as Queen of Wales inherited the throne of Gwynedd in 817 and shared it with her husband Merfyn or Mervin, a royal chieftain, heir to the kingdom of Powys, who was slain in a battle at Cettyl A. D. 843.

69 RODRI MAWR or Roderic ll Mawre, surnamed "The Great." Married Anghared, daughter of Merick King of Gardigan. He succeeded to the throne in 843, and became in the right of his mother, King of Gwynedd and through the right of his father, King of Powys, also in his wife's right, King of Dehaubarth, thus uniting all Wales under one government in A. D. 844. He partitioned his kingdom among his three sons, on condition, that the two youngest sons, and their successors should be subject to the Princes of North Wales, or to the posterity of the oldest son. He was slain while fighting an invading English army in 877. Six of his eight sons were dauntless warriors.

70 CADELL, Prince of South Wales or Dehaubarth reigned between 877-907 the date of his death.

71 HYWEL DHA or Howel The Good. Dha, signifies "The Good", for such is the honorable title his countrymen have conferred upon him. He succeeded his father in 907 and immediately undertook a series of reforms including the formation of a code of laws comprising, 1st. The Royal Prerogative; 2nd. The Civil Jurisprudence; 3rd. The Criminal Law. Before the new code was prepared he made a journey in 926 to Rome to examine the ancient Roman laws. Afterwards he called a council of the six wisest and most discreet men in Wales, and 140 ecclesiastics, together with the chiefs of tribes and persons of noble rank. The result of this convention was submitted to a committee of thirteen, including the distinguished Blegwryd, chancellor of Llandar. Their work was read, approved, and ratified by the National convention, three copies were made in Cymraeg, and King Howel directed the Archbishop of Mynyn to publish a sentence of excommunication against all persons refusing to obey its laws. In 930 he again visited Rome and obtained the ratification of the new code of laws by the Pope. Contemporary writers style him, "The chief and glory of the Britons" and time has failed to dim the calm halo which encircles his name. He died in 948.

72 OWEN. Succeeded his father in 948 and released the throne to his son. Died in 987.

73 ENEON. Died before his father. His daughter GWENLLIAN, married.

74 ELYSTAN GLODRYDD, born in 927; killed in 983. He was the reigning Prince of the Fourth Royal Tribe of Wales, and Prince of Ferlix. One record reads "The bandlet-wearing Prince," held their territory between the Wye and the Severn rivers, immediately of the English Sovereign". That is to say they paid their tax or tribute direct to the English Sovereign.

75 CADWGAN, Prince or Lord of Ferlix, married Eva; daughter of GWRGANT, Son of Ithel, and sister of JESTYN, head of the Fifth Royal Tribe.

76 LLYWELYN, Lord of Buallt and Radnor, married Joan, daughter of Sir Aaron.

77 SISSYLIT, Lord of Buallt, married MARGARET, daughter of Einon.

Note: Prof. J. W. P. Jenks said records showed these men in the direct line father to son but that it was too illegible for translation. My brother W. J. Jenks attempted to get more detail of these men but aside of the proof of being in the direct line of father to son could not make out the detail which was worn and faded in the records he examined.

82 JENKYN CAMBRAY, of Wolverton (Manor) in the Parish of Eaton-under-Eywood. Shropshire, England; married Dorothy, third daughter and co-heiress of Sir Walter Collyng (Knight) of Church Stretton.

83 JOHN JENKES, (or some writers give it Robert). About A. D. 1350) of Wolverton, married ALICE, daughter of Stephen Bowdler. This was the first ancestor to take the name JENKS. It was during the reign of Edward 3rd.

84 THOMAS JENKES, married a daughter of John Midleton.

85 JOHN JENKES, married a daughter of Hugh Higins of Wolverton.

86 ROLAND JENKES, (or Rowland) of Wolverton married Mary, daughter and heir of Richard Moore.

87 JOHN JENKES, of Wolverton, married Elizabeth, daughter of Edward Leighton of the "Cotes".

88 WILLIAM J. JENKES, married Elizabeth, daughter of William Adams, of Clayton.

89 FRANCIS JENKES of Aston, married Anna, daughter of William Downes.

90 ARTHUR JENCKES, born in England. Iron worker and now commoner so birth, life and marriage obscure but father of Joseph.

91 JOSEPH JENKS, born in England in 1602 and died in America in 1683.

FIRST.- According to the indefatigable researches of Rev. Dr. William Jenks, of Boston, Mass., during the first half of the 19th century, the family are of Welsh descent; and as that Nation are known to have preserved the traditions of their Ancestors more tenaciously than any other people in Europe, by careful enquiry and long correspondence with Welsh Statisticians he satisfied himself of the correctness of the fore-going line of ancestry, from about the date of 150 B. C. to the year 1350 A. D. through credible tradition, and thence by the archives of Welsh and English Heraldry to 1643, and thence by American History to the later generations.

The Welsh historians give long lists of pretended Princes commencing hundreds of years before Christ. Certain it is that the Welsh people are to this day descendants of the Aborigines of the Island of Great Britain without intermixture to any considerable extent with the English or any other people.

To the time of Edward 1st in the 13th century they were divided into separate Tribes, each tribe having its own independant Prince.

History has shown that from 927 A. D. to 983 Elystan Glodrydd was Prince of the Fourth Royal Tribe, and the line of his direct descent continues to about 1350 A. D. when Wales having been fully conquered by the English through chicanery, the Jenks family removed to England and about three hundred years after (1643) the American ancestor migrated to the New England Colonies.

SECOND.- As to the Coat of Arms, the shield and its motto, M O D O D O M I N U S A D S I T was adopted by the Welsh Prince, and as the boar is the bravest animal recognized in Heraldry must signify unusual bravery on the part of the possessor.

When the family removed to England its Royal Lineage ceased with the subjugation of Wales -- but the records of English Heraldry state that in 1582 Queen Elizabeth conferred a title upon Sir George Jenks, who adopted for his Coat of Arms the ancient Welsh one of the Family, and added a Crest with the motto of the crest, A U D A X A T C A U T U S.

The following is a description of the Coat of Arms, which may be read in Heraldic language only by omitting the parenthetical expressions or, by omitting the Heraldic technicalities it may be read in common English.

He beareth argent (white), three boars' heads couped (out off close) sable (in black), a chief sable indented. Crest, a lion rampant (in a fighting attitude), regardant (looking back), or (in yellow), holding defiantly a boar's head in his paws, sable (in black). Motto of the shield, "P R O V I D E D T H E L O R D F A V O R S". Motto of the Crest, "B O L D B U T C A U T I O U S".

COLOR PLAN. Gold scroll on the outer edge of shield. Top field royal purple. Lower field white. Boar's heads black.

Crest. Lion gold. Boar head black. Bar under lion's foot, gold and royal purple. Top and bottom mottos, black letters in black outline.

E X P L A N A T I O N S.

The scope of this record is not to include all persons bearing the name of Jenks, Jenkes, Jencks or Jenckes, but only the direct line of descent from Joseph Jenks, Senior, who came from England, down to one Nicholas Jenks of the Fifth generation, after which the side lines will be carried out as complete as is possible. The so called register system is adopted. The figures preceding a name is the register number of that name for identification afterwards. The number following a name is its generation number, hence all names having the same following number belong to the same generation. The roman numerals preceding a name indicates the order of birth in that family.

GENEALOGY

---ooOoo---

JOSEPH JENKS, Sr. having migrated in 1643 and by his second marriage in America, became the ancestor of a new line, this record will follow out the line of the descendants of that one of two sons by his first marriage left in England, with orders to follow the Father when he should become of age, and who became the progenitor of the direct ancestry in America, of Nicholas Jenks (5) of Pawtucket, R. I. and later of North Brookfield, Mass.

He settled in Lynn, Massachusetts, and by a second marriage with Elizabeth who d. July 1679, he had three sons and two daughters and became the ancestor of the New Hampshire and Maine families. His most noted descendant by his second marriage, is Rev. William Jenks D. D. of Boston, Mass. and editor of the "Comprehensive Commentary" published about the year 1835.

FIRST GENERATION

1 (91) JOSEPH JENKES (I) Sr. b. in England 1602; d. in Lynn, March 1683:

m. his first wife died in England. - name unknown.

Children

2 i Joseph (2) b. in England 1632, went to Massachusetts in 1645.

3 ii George (2) b. in England, went to Virginia. He, Joseph (1) migrated from Colnbrook, in Buckinghamshire, England, 17 miles West of London in 1643, himself a widower and leaving in England his two sons, Joseph, Jr. and George, he settled in Lynn, Mass.

From recently discovered records of the career of Joseph, Sr. it is learned that he remained in Lynn and became the acknowledged head of the iron-smelting and foundry business; and the first builder of machinery in this country, having introduced the idea, first granted by act of Parliament in 1625, of protection for the manufacture of improvements, by petition to the Government of Massachusetts Bay. In 1646 he took out patents for mill improvements; the first patents granted in America. In 1647 he built a forge and entered upon the manufacture of his improved scythes, for which he took out a patent May 23, 1655. The improvement consisted in narrowing and lengthening the blade, and in bending the snath from its straight form into that of the present double curve, for which improvement his biographer says, "He should be held in grateful remembrance."

In 1652 he made the dies for the first coinage of colonial money, the "Pine Tree Shilling". In 1654 he built a fire engine to the order of the "Selectmen of Boston" - the first built in this country. In 1667 he sought aid to establish a wire manufactory.

In his foundry was cast the first "hollow ware" in this country and there is said to be preserved in Salem the first, or one of the first that came out of the mould, which was exhibited at the Columbian Exposition. He was accounted "a man of great genius."

Respecting the Iron Works, which were the first established in America, the following is taken from a book entitled "lin, her Jewels", History of Lynn, Mass. by A. Lewis.

"In 1643 Robert Bridges took Bog iron ore found in Saugus to London, and succeeding in forming a company called "Company of Undertakers for the Iron Works", consisting of the following wealthy and enterprising gentlemen; Lionel Copley, Esq., of Yorkshire; Nicholas Bond, Esq., and Thomas Pury, Esq. of Westminster; John Becx, and William Beauchamp, merchants; William Hicocke, citizen; Thomas Foley, Gentleman, John Pococke and William Becke, Merchant Tailors, all of London; William Greenhill of Stepney, Middlesexshire, and Thomas Weld, Minister of Gateshead, Durhamshire.

The Company advanced £ 1000 to commence the work. Land was bought of Thomas Hudson, on the West bank of Saugus River. The village of the Iron Works was called Hammersmith, from that place in England where many of the workmen came from. Joseph Jenks came from Hammersmith. He was a machinist at the Iron foundry, and by his hands the first models were made, and the first castings taken of many domestic implements and iron tools. The first article cast was a small iron pot, capable of containing about one quart. Thomas Hudson procured this famous old Iron pot and it remained in the Hudson family until after 1844".

This pot is in the Essex Institute in Salem, Mass.

Joseph Wormwood, brother-in-law of Joseph Jenks was warned in 1668 to leave Concord, Mass., as the iron works were not paying.

Joseph b. 1622 d. 1717 m. Esther Ballard.

He was born in Buckingshire, England and later (1645) followed his father to Lynn, Mass., and from thence he removed to Rhode Island. 25 March 1669 he was granted land on either side of the Pawtuxet river in Warwick, for the erection of his sawmill, and he, for this favor from the purchasers of Warwick, agreed to let them have boards at 4 s. 6 d. the hundred, and all other sawn work to be equivalent to same. The grant included trees of pine, chestnut or oak, within half a mile on each side of the river; that is floatable; the proprietors reserving the right to cut what they need. Being a forge-man by trade, as were his Welsh ancestry for many generations before him, and finding not sufficient water power in Warwick, he removed to Pawtucket, R. I. at the age of 39. 10 October 1671, he bought sixty acres, more or less, with right of commorage, of Abel Potter and wife Rachel, said land belonging formerly to Rachel's grandfather, Ezekiel Holliman, and being situated near Pawtucket Falls. He erected a Saw-mill also built a forge for manufacturing iron, and had the same burnt by the Indians in 1675-6 during King Philip's War. Nelson Jencks of Woonsocket, R. I. has a picture of the falls, and Jenks Mill, also copy of deed to the land. He and his four sons, Joseph, Nathaniel, Ebenezer and William, built a dwelling house for each of themselves, and in 1820 they were all in tolerable good repair. The last was taken down in 1877, and must have been about 200 years old.

1677 we find him a Freeman. 1 July 1679 he was taxed 12 s. 6 d. including his saw-mill. 1679-80 and 91 he was a deputy. He and two others on 5 May 1680, were empowered by the Assembly to purchase a bell "for the public use of the Colony, and for giving notice or signifying the several times or sittings of the Assembly's and Courts of Trials and General Councils". The bell was purchased for £ 3-10s of Freelove Arnold, dau. of Gov. Benedict Arnold. Previously the Assembly had been called together by beat of drum. Between 1680 and 1698 for thirteen of these years he was Assistant in the General Assembly. During 1681, he was Counsellor of the Governor. There is a record of his having land laid out 14 November 1683.

1 September 1687 he and his sons, Joseph and Nathaniel, were taxed together 12 shillings.

6 August 1688, his ratable estate consisted of 6 acres planting land, 2 acres meadow, 8 acres pasture, 30 acres wild pasture, rights in land, 4 oxen, 7 cows, 2 steers, heifer, yearling, 2 mares, colt, swine, sheep and saw-mill.

We find a record of the current price of produce at this time, viz: "Port 3 d. or 2½ cents per pound. Peas 3 s. 6 d. or 29½ cents per bushel, Wool 12 d. or 8 cents per pound, Butter 6 d. or 4½ cents per pound, Corn 3 s. or 25 cents per bushel, Oats 2 s. 3 d. or 28½ cents per bushel; 40 shillings of New England currency was equal to 30 shillings English currency. A marked contrast to prices in New York City, May 1906, viz: Pork 11 cents, Wool 25 cents uncleaned, 70 cents cleaned, Butter 25 cents, Corn 58 cents, Oats 45 cents.

30 Jan. 1690 he and five others, and the Deputy Governor wrote a letter to William and Mary, congratulating them on their accession to the throne, and informing them that since the deposition of Sir Edward Andros, the former government under the charter had been reassumed.

They also mentioned the seizure of Andros, in Rhode Island in his flight from Massachusetts, and his return to that colony on the demand of Massachusetts. It is recorded that his will was dated 21 October 1708 and proved 11 February 1717 Executrix, wife Esther, but she declining by reason of age and inability, her son Nathaniel acted at her request, and by appointment of the Courts. He confirmed deeds already made to sons, Joseph, Nathaniel, Ebenezer and William. To sons Nathaniel, Ebenezer and William, other land was given and if any further division was made by proprietors of Providence, then the four sons were to share equally. To sons, Ebenezer and William, the coal house and his half of the forge, at death of himself and wife. To loving wife Esther, all the rest of movable estate, cattle and chattels, for life, and what remains at her death she to dispose of to children or grand-children as she sees fit.

Inventory - £36, 19 s., 8 d. - viz: wearing apparel, 6 pewter platters, 3 plates, 3 basins, 5 porringers, etc., brass and ironware, old books, money due for cow sold £4, 10 s., another cow unsold £4, 10 s., warming pan, smoothing iron, old bible, stillyards etc. He died in the 85th year of his age, and it is probable that he was the first white man buried in Pawtucket.

THIRD GENERATION

3 JOSEPH, 3rd. b. in 1656; d. 15th June 1740; m. Alice Dexter who died, then he m. Martha Holmes Brown in 1689.

He was of large stature and well proportioned, standing in his stocking feet, seven feet and two inches, a man of a most grave and commanding aspect. He was of great utility in the defence of Providence, R. I. against the surrounding Indians, gradually ascending from an Ensign to be Chief Colonel of the Colony.

In 1708 he was one of the committee to settle the Northern line between this Colony and the Province of Massachusetts. On the 10th of August 1719 he was commissioned by the Governor and Company of Rhode Island an agent to prosecute before the King in London, England, or any authority, or Judicature that may be committed, the Colony's appeal against the Colony of Connecticut's further encroachments upon said Colony. He had success in the business, and was then chosen Deputy Governor for a number of years. In 1727 he was chosen Governor of the Colony and served five years. He was solicited to serve the Colony longer as their Governor, but he told them with heartfelt gratitude that he could perceive that his natural faculties were abating, and if he should continue in the service a few years longer as their Governor it is possible he should not be sensible of their decay, and in that case perhaps he might not be willing to resign. He, therefore, deemed it most beneficial for the Colony and prudent for himself to resign in season. He was a distinguished member in church as well as in state.

While in London he not only attended at Court, but also at church, and ascertained the true state of all the Baptist churches, both general and particular in London. He was blind for several years before he died, and "as a shock of corn cometh in in his season", so likewise he came to his grave in a full age, upon which is the following epitaph.

In memory of ye
Hon. JOSEPH JENKS Esq.,
late Governor of ye Colony of Rhode Island.
Deceased ye
15. day of June A. D. 1740 in ye 84th year of his age. He was much beloved and honored in life, and lamented in death. He was a bright example of virtue in every stage of life.

He was a zealous Christian, a wise and prudent Governor, a kind husband and a tender father, a good neighbor and a faithful friend, grave, sober, pleasant in behavior, beautiful in person, with a soul truly great, heroic and sweetly tempered.

30 Jan. 1689 he sent it to others, and the deputy governor wrote a letter to William and Mary congratulating them on their accession to the throne, and informing them that since the deposition of Sir Edmund Andros, the former government under the charter had been restored.

(7) Sarah, b. d. m. Hon. James Fenner, Governor.

(5) Jeremiah, b. d. He was a military man, a Captain.

(4) Catharine, b. d. m. William Turpin.
The record says she was of great age and had lived with her husband about twenty-seven years, within which time, they kept a Public House, when and where the General Assembly and Courts of the Colony and County, and Town Meetings were frequently held. After which she was refined in the furnace of affliction. She was a widow of about four score and eight years, which departed not from the temple, but served God with fastings and prayer night and day.

(4) Nathaniel, b. d. m. Catharine Scott.
He was famous for strength. He lifted on his hands and knees upon his back, a stick of timber judged to be 3000 lbs. weight. He was a Captain in the Militia. In his day an occurence took place worthy of memory. There was a strong high board fence erected across the West abutment of Pawtucket Bridge, with a gate and lock and key thereunto to prevent people from bringing the small pox into the Colony from Boston. In a very dark night a certain man came to Capt. Jenks, who was keeper of the gate and wanted to get his horse through the fence. The Capt. told the stranger he could not be admitted, because the bridge was taken up to the Eastward of the fence. Whereupon the man said he had ridden from the Eastward to the fence and did not discover the bridge to be taken up, neither could he be persuaded that it was so. The Capt. also could not believe the report. But upon ocular demonstration they were both convinced that he had ridden over the Falls on a single stringpiece fourteen inches wide and forty feet long, and twenty feet above the Falls.

His wife was not a member of the church; but was a virtuous woman and expressed an humble desire to touch the hem of His garment; and we hope and trust she has been made whole. She died in her 96th year.

(4) William. We find the following record of his life:
16 June 1713 he was taxed 14 s. 6 d.
Oct. 1720 he, having expended £15 upon Pawtucket Bridge, the Assembly, upon his petition, granted piece of land to him north of Blackstone River, in angle of said river, providing that on a survey of the same, if it be worth more than £15 or £16, he to pay over-plus to the General Treasury. The Surveyors reported 33 Acres and 53 poles, worth 10 s. an acre. 1727-28-29-38 he was a deputy.

February 1731 he was appointed on a committee with six others, to meet the Massachusetts commissioners, to make, and finally settle, and ascertain the east boundary of this colony. October 1731 he was allowed £100 by Assembly, to build half of a bridge at Pawtucket Falls. 1734-35 he was one of the four Justice of Inferior Court of Common Pleas, for the County of Providence.

February 1739 he was appointed by Assembly to repair the half of great bridge over Pawtucket River (the part built by this colony) and was granted £50 for the purpose. The bridge had been partly carried away by the late great flood of water. This year he was Deputy from Smithfield.

2 Dec. 1740 he was appointed on a committee to represent and manage the affairs of this colony before the commissioners, to hear and determine the boundaries between Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

28 October 1765 his estate Inventorial, £72, 8 s. 6 d. presented by Jonathan Jenckes and widow Mary. 2 cows, 2 swine, large bible and 12 other books, warming pan, pewter, silver cup, 4 silver spoons, gun, etc. Jonathan Jenckes appeared before the Town Council, and read the will of his father, and the widow Mary Jenckes, being present, did not accept of it. Stephen Jenckes, a witness, testified that the deceased was in his right mind.

John Whipple Potter Jenks was the senior professor of the faculty of Brown University and had been retired only ten days before his death as professor emeritus of zoology.

For 20 years and over he had been a professor in the Providence institution of learning. From 1842 till 1871 Prof. Jenks was principal of Pierce Academy in Middleboro and he it was who led that highly prized local institution to flourish like a green bay tree. Prof. Jenks was Pierce Academy, as time gave ample proof.

For 20 years he lectured on agricultural zoology and was considered one of the foremost zoologists in the United States. He wrote the text-book "Zoology", the fourteen weeks course in that study which has been adopted by the chautauqua assemblies. He spent a great deal of his spare time and while abroad in research work connected with the family ancestry finally compiling one from which this brief is largely copied.

The deceased was a great traveller. He had been all over the United States, Europe, Alaska and the Sandwich Island. He graduated at Brown in the famous class of 1838 at an extremely young age for a graduate.

An extract from the obituary of Charles W. Jenks in the "New York Electrical Engineer" of April 10, 1880:

"In early life Mr. Jenks was a popular clerk in the old Adams House in Boston; in 1869 he was Editor of the "Chicago Bureau", a journal devoted to manufacturing interests. While here he studied the gulf stream carefully, also Thermal winds as relating to Meteorology. He also acquired an intimate knowledge of shipping from all parts of the world and of its obstacles and a partial remedy and published several articles on the subject. This coming to the attention of President Grant he was summoned to the White House. The result of this conference was the establishment of the present system of signal service.

In 1871 he opened the first Corundum mine in the world in North Carolina and here discovered a vein of the oriental gems, Ruby, Sapphire, Emerald, etc., the first found in the world in a vein. These discoveries gave him an entre into Scientific circles all over the world.

In 1875 he imported the first Angora goats ever brought into America from the Province of Angora in Asia Minor. These went to Col. Richard Peters of Atlanta, Ga.

In 1878 he installed the first exhibit of the "Brush Electric Light Co." in the first Mechanics Fair held in Boston, afterward installing a plant for the firm of Freeland Lewis and Co. in that city. In 1882 he became editor of "The Industrial Record" of New York and was chiefly instrumental in connection with the Lockwood Mfg. Co., East Boston and Gen. C. E. Dodge in building the Cape Cod Canal. Sometime afterward he prevailed upon Mr. Edison to invent an electric Percussion Rock Drill, now in general use in mining and quarrying."

Mr. Jenks at a very early age had acquired a reputation as a rapid telegraph operator. In 1880 when the telephone began to be agitated he started and operated the first telephone local exchange, in a barn on Green Street, Brockton, Mass. where a few, at first, rather skeptical subscribers were obtained with the aid of his brother Charles, his assistant. The following year it having been amply demonstrated as a success, he built the first line ever constructed from one town to another, -- Brockton to S. Abington, then to Boston, 20 miles and put both into successful operation. In 1882-3 in connection with Mr. Wm. Lloyd Garrison he built the first Edison Electric Light station in the world employing the underground system. Mr. Edison was present at the installation. Mr. Charles Jenks was also his assistant in this work. Mr. Jenks soon went to New York as an official in the old Edison Co. and was thereafter closely connected with Mr. Edison and the progress of the company until it was merged into The General Electric Co. with offices at 120 Broadway, New York.

He was a member of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers since 1887, also of the New York Electrical Society! The Society of Arts connected with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology! Honorary Fellow of the American Electro-Therapeutic Association! A member of the American Electro-Chemical Society, also the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He was for many years and nearly up to the time of his death, Secretary of the Board of Patent Control, which had in charge the patent litigation of the General Electric and Westinghouse Companies and their associated interests.

m. So. Boston, Mass. 20 Feb. 1882, Abbie Lovisa Handy, b. Charlestown, Mass., 20 Mar. 1853, dau. Albert and Cordelia M. Handy, res. 154 L Street, South Boston, Mass.

Mr. Jenks was with his father in the opening of the first Corundum mines 1871-2. He then became a sheep raiser in Texas: afterwards as assistant to his brother in the first telephone exchange and the first Electric Light plant in America, 1881-3. In 1885 he was manager of large live stock interests in Montana. From 1889 to present as mining engineer he has explored and operated mines in many countries. Like his father he has been a pioneer in several fields, until he lost his health during many months exposure in the jungles of South and Central America in 1917-19. He was successful in finding and acquiring by purchase heavy deposits of the mineral Bauxite for the operating company in Worcester, Mass. who sent him to South America. A long life of hardship, travel and adventure! In his prime he weighed 160 pounds and stood 5 feet, 11 inches tall. In a contest of strength in 1890 he lifted without harness (hands alone) 1000 pounds of iron castings clear of the ground. He has been a member of the Masonic order for over fifty years.

Mr. Jenks was also a member of the American Institute of Mining Engineers, New York City for many years! Also of the Nat. Geographic Society! He has always been intensely interested in the Study of Archaeology and Prehistoric man and in 1877 explored several of the cliff Dwellings in the Canyons of Arizona and New Mexico, and before they had been disturbed and despoiled by subsequent explorers!

Among Mr. Jenks' writings is found the following:

"In 1871 one Silas McDowell owner of a farm near the head of the Little Tennessee river (there called "Cullasaja") and in Macon Co., N. Car. had summoned my father and me from our mines nearby to witness what is perhaps the earliest recorded discovery in America of a cremation of Prehistoric man ages before. A shallow pit had been prepared near the river bank and partly filled with soft yet tenacious clay! The nude body of a man had been placed thereon face down and covered with the same clay to a depth of perhaps twelve inches, all forming a slightly oval mass. A large log fire over it all had reduced the body to ashes! Ploughing had revealed the blackened mass covered with charcoal! A few strokes with a pick divided the mass into three pieces revealing to us the perfect cast of a man of the ancient race within apparently a little below our normal size. That night a heavy rain lasting three days unfortunately disintegrated the mass."

He also explored the mounds of the Prehistoric race along the east coast of Florida in 1903 and contributed some fine crania of men and women and ornaments of the Ancient people which he exhumed to the Peabody (Yale) Museum, New Haven, Conn. Also he contributed a select exhibit from the interior Indian tribes of British and French Guiana, S. A. for the Norton Company Museum in Worcester, Mass. during his explorations in 1917-18 in the jungles along the principal streams of their Colonies."

The undersigned wishes to say that he is in possession of a great deal of additional Genealogical data in the lives of Jonathan Jenks, son of (Judge) William - also of collateral lines, diverging therefrom.' Much of this is so largely of his near relatives, and in so much detail that he has decided to omit it from this brief American History. He will be happy, however, to furnish specific information concerning almost any person in this line from Doctor Nicholas and to 1900 A. D.

Prof. J. W. P. Jenks' life and that of my brother William J. Jenks has been given in some little detail as they are largely responsible for much of the information herein. Also my father's life, Charles W. Jenks as having contributed quite a good deal which has benefited the world, and also contributed the booklet by George E. DESCENDANTS OF DR. JOHN JENCKES THROUGH JOSEPH, 4TH, BOOMER AND GEORGE WASHINGTON

Interesting Items Gathered by the Jenks Bros.

"Dr. John Jenks who was Colonial Agent or Ambassador, the first sent from the U. S. to Europe following the close of the Revolutionary War."

"The reputation of Joseph Jenks as a metal worker spread in the Colonies and when in 1652 a mint was set up in Boston he was chosen to cut the dies for the first coins. His daughter-in-law is said to have provided the design of a Pine Tree which gave to the new piece of money its popular name."

The following refers to the machine Joseph Jenks invented and used in coining the first money ever minted in America:

> "This proved to be an apparatus mounted on an upright, resembling what is commonly known as a "sawhorse," the top of which is about two feet in width, and six inches in thickness. Two legs at each end, slanting slightly outward, support the bench-like standard on which the equipment for stamping the metal is mounted.
> The press in which the dies are enclosed is about twenty inches in height, and about twelve inches wide. It is made of iron, the dies held in place in grooves on two sides of the upright. The plate is forced downward in the process of stamping by use of a turnscrew pressure operated by a metal handle serving as a crank. Workmanship shows favorable comparison with that of the present day, the craftsmanship of which could scarcely be improved.
> Metal mined on the farm near Brattleboro, Vt., owned by relatives of the Jenks family was obtained from what was known as "Higley hill," and was silver and copper used in the minting of the famous "pine tree shillings" so popular during pre-Revolutionary days. Joseph Jenkes is also believed to have been the first to manufacture bronze for commercial purposes in the western hemisphere and he also invented the first scythes and sickles used in America.

INVENTS SCYTHE FOR "CUTTING OF GRASSE"

> "In 1654 the Boston selectmen arranged to have Jenks make "an engine to carry water in case of fire", said to be the first fire-engine in America. Meanwhile, the iron works sold to Jenks the right to build a forge of his own for the manufacture of scythes. It was here, in 1655, that he produced a scythe of a distinctly new type, 'for the more speedy cutting of grasse'. This was an improvement on the old English model, and its adequacy is suggested by the fact that there has been little change in the shape or size of scythes since that time.
> "In 1667 Jenks was petitioning for aid 'to commence a wire factory'. He was not successful in obtaining financial support, however, in this venture."

PREFACE

The following data having been recently discovered among some of my father's old documents by a sister, Miss Bettie P. Jenks of Boston, I have decided to include it ver batim. This, a printed booklet, was compiled by George E. Jenks of Concord, N. H. in 1834 and as this branch of the family contains many distinguished men, as given therein, and also many more of later date, it will prove of much interest, as well as to give living members of this branch an opportunity to connect with the more ancient ancestors through the History.

JENKS FAMILY OF NEWPORT, N. H.

(This surname is found spelled Jenks, Jinks, Jynks, Jenkes, Jencks, and Jenckes. Some of these methods have arisen from careless spelling, the result of false pronunciation. The signatures of different members of the same family, as well as in some individual cases, in this country, are found to be Jenks, Jencks, and Jenckes. Joseph, Sen., (1) spelled "Jenks"; Joseph, Jr., (2) "Jenckes". Their descendants chiefly follow the first method. Jeremiah's (6) signatures were "Jenks" until his later years, when his signature is found to be "Jenckes", the method adopted by his sons. His grandsons, however, have chiefly followed the first or simpler method.)

This family is descended from the Welsh, or ancient Britons. Robert Jenkes was of Wolverton (manor), parish of Eaton-under-Eywood, Shropshire, about 1350, in the reign of Edward III. This gentleman was the son of Jenkyn Cambrey, of that place, and Dorothy, daughter and co-heiress of Sir Walter Collyng, Knight, of Church Stretton, in the same county. Herbert Jenkes, Esq., possessed Wolverton about 1640, and his estate fell to his heirs by a daughter. From this ancestry was JOSEPH JENKS,(1) founder and machinest, of Hammersmith, England, b. 1602. He was "a very ingenious man," and was induced by Gov. Winthrop (the younger) to come to Lynn, Mass., about 1642, as master mechanic, to establish "the iron and steel works." He is the acknowledged head of the iron-smelting and founding business, and the first builder of machinery, in this country. He was also the first patentee of inventions in America, having introduced the idea (first granted by act of parliament in 1625) of protection for the manufacture of improvements, by petition to the government of Massachusetts Bay. In 1646 he took patents for mill improvements; and in 1655 he patented the present form of the grass scythe, for which, his biographer says, "he should be held in grateful remembrance." In 1652 he made the dies for the first coinage of money, - the "Pine Tree Shilling." In 1654 he built a fire engine, to the order of the "selectmen of Boston" (the first built in the country). In 1667 he sought aid to establish a wire manufactory. In 1647 he built a forge, and entered upon the manufacture of his improved scythes nine years before his application for a patent was granted.

JONES FAMILY OF NEWPORT, R. I.

(This surname is found spelled Jones, Jonas, Jyrds, Jonkos, Jonokes, and Jenokes. Some of these methods have arisen from careless spelling, the result of false pronunciation. The signature of different members of the same family, as well as in some individual cases, in this country, are found to be Jones, Jonkes, and Jackes. Jones, Jon, (1) spelled "Jonks"; Joseph, Jr., (2) "Jenokes". Their descendants chiefly follow the first method. Jeremiah's (4) signature more "Jonkes" until his later years, when his signature is found to be Jones", the method adopted by his sons. His grandsons, however, more closely followed the first or simpler method.)

This family is descended from the Welsh, or ancient Britons. Robert Jenkes was of Molverton (manor), parish of Eaton-under-Heywood, Shropshire, about 1550, in the reign of Edward III. This gentleman was the son of Jenkyn Cowdrey, of that place, and Dorothy, daughter and co-heiress of Sir Walter Colling, Knight, of Church Stretton, in the same county. Herbert Jenkes, Esq., possessed Molvertom about 1640, and his estate fell to his nephew by a daughter. From this manor was JOSEPH JENKES (1) founder and machinist, of Hammersmith, England, by county. He was "a very ingenious man," and was induced by Gov. Winthrop (the younger) to come to Lynn, Mass., about 1646, as master mechanic, to establish "the iron and steel works." He is the acknowledged head of the Iron-working and founding business, and the first builder of machinery in this country. He was also the first patentee of inventions in America, having introduced the idea (first granted by pat. of Parliament in 1629) of protection for the manufacture of improvements, by petition to the government of Massachusetts Bay, in 1646. He took patents for mill improvements and in 1655 he patented the process form of the slitting engine for nails. His biographer says, "he should be held in grateful remembrance." In 1651 he made the dies for the first coinage of money - the "Pine Tree Shilling." In 1654 he built a fire engine, to the order of the "selectmen of Boston" (the first built in the country). In 1647 he sought aid to establish a wire manufactory. In 1647 to build a forge, and erected upon the manufactures of his improved sorghum mine years before his application for a patent was granted.

Mr. Jenks was a widower, and left two sons, Joseph,(2) and George, in England, who early followed him to America. He married again in Lynn, and had three sons and two daughters. John Farmer, in his genealogies of early N. E. settlers, says "his descendants throughout New England have been respectable."

JOSEPH (2) b. in England, in 1632, followed his father to Lynn about 1647, and served at his business; he subsequently went to Providence, R. I., and established the iron founding and machine business at Pawtucket falls, founding the town of Pawtucket. His shops were destroyed in King Philip's War, but were rebuilt. By his enterprise the foundation was laid which made that town the great iron workshop of the colonies, and the place where skilled mechanics gathered, who have made Rhode Island noted for her iron and steel products, machinery, and other manufactories. In 1774 the manufacture of firearms began to be extensively carried on in this place by Stephen Jenks; and several independent companies were furnished with arms of home manufacture. Sixty heavy cannon, beside fieldpieces, were made at the iron-works. He m. Esther Ballard, of Lynn, b. in Eng. in 1633, by whom he had five daughters (who all married) and four sons: Joseph, ass't. governor eleven years, and governor five years; Nathaniel (3), major of militia, and much in public life; Ebenezer, pastor of the first Baptist church in Providence; and William, lawyer, and chief-justice of the colony.

NATHANIEL (3) b. in Providence in 1662, m. Hannah Bosworth; he d. in 1723, leaving five daughters and three sons. His eldest son, JONATHAN,(4) m. Mary Slack, of Scituate, and had three sons and five daughters. His s. JONATHAN (5) m. Hannah Pullen, by whom he had six sons and three daughters.

JEREMIAH JENKS,(6) mariner and farmer; s. of Jonathan (5) and Hannah (Pullen) Jenks; was b. in Smithfield, R. I., Nov. 29, 1739, and went to Newport prior to the Revolutionary war. A deed from James Sheldon to him, bearing date Jan. 24, 1771, attests the purchase of "one share, of 340 acres, on east side of Connecticut river (Newport)," one sixty-eighth part of its territory. In a deed of land purchased by him in "Saville," July 2, 1773, he is described as "late of Smithfield, R. I., now of Newport". Feb. 25, 1776, he m. Lucy Whipple, of Cumberland, R. I., b. April 16, 1746. Tradition says they arrived in Newport, with their household goods, July 4, 1776, and first established themselves on what is known as the Parmelee place, on the south road. In 1776 Mr. Jenk's name appears third on the list of signers of the "Association Test," which was circulated for signatures at the request of the Committee of Safety for the colony. At a meeting of the inhabitants, July 24, 1776, he was chosen lieutenant of the Newport volunteers, and was among those who left, June 9, 1777, to take part in the capture of Ticonderoga. July 10, of the same year, he was one of a committee of three to fix the value of farm products, which schedule of prices was to be used as a basis of exchange in lieu of money. In March, 1791, he was elected selectman; and Nov. 7, of the same year, he was one of a committee of five to superintend the building of the Congregational meeting-house, which for thirty years served that society, and stood near the foot of Claremont hill. Between 1778 and 1792 he made purchases of land from Josiah Stevens, Aaron Buell, James Church, Israel Bryan, Uriah Wilcox, Nathan Fisher, and Stephen Perry, by which he became the largest landholder in the town; in 1802 he was the heaviest tax-payer in Newport. He gave a farm of more than one hundred acres to each of three sons, the homestead of two hundred acres to a fourth, and a forty-acre lot of land to each of three daughters. Mr. Jenks was of unusual stature, as were three of his sons. He was several inches over six feet in height, with a corresponding muscular development. His wife and three of her daughters were nearly, if not quite six feet tall. He d. Jan. 4, 1811; his wife survived him until May 19, 1819.

"Dr. Jenks," says Dr. Row, in announcing his death to the Medical Society, of which he was an active member and officer, "was in many respects a remarkable man, and in his life displayed as much energy and devotion in his profession as any practitioner I ever met. As a physician, he was accomplished and successful, proverbial for his kind and courteous demeanor towards his professional brethren, and urbanity to all. He was an active and consistent member of the Baptist church, and a devout Christian." Dr. F. D. Cunningham, of Richmond, in an address as president of the Virginia Medical Society, says, -- "Among the names of those we mourn, none will be heard with more regret than that of Dr. Oliver B. Jenks, a gentleman who manifested the liveliest interest in our society from its organization. Although himself a victim to ill-health, with the spirit of a true philanthropist he made use of knowledge acquired at the expense of great suffering in his own person for the benefit of others. Those of us who attended the meeting at Norfolk can hardly fail to remember the extraordinary personal experience he then related, and the valuable conclusions he had deduced from it in regard to the use of chloroform in certain forms of heart disease. Our society never had a more ardent supporter, nor our members a better example."

EDWARD AUGUSTUS JENKS, s. of Oliver, was b. Oct. 30, 1830; spent the first fifteen years of his life at the homestead; June 2, 1846, became an apprentice to Asa McFarland, printer, in Concord; at the close of his apprenticeship, he attended several terms at Thetford academy, Thetford, Vt., closing his connection with that institution in 1851. In April, 1852, he formed a copartnership with Joseph C. Abbott (afterwards U. S. Senator from North Carolina), and purchased the Manchester "American" beginning his active business life in his 22d year, under the firm name of Abbott & Jenks. In 1856 he sold his interest in the "American", and went to Lowell, Mass., where he resided two years. In 1858 he became a resident of New York city, where he was "proof-reader" in some of the largest publishing houses there; remained in that city until the spring of 1862, when he went to Cincinnati, Ohio, and became connected with the firm of Alexander Swift & Co., iron manufacturers, and contractors for the building of the monitors Catawba, Oneota, Klamath, and Yuma, for the government, where he remained until their completion and delivery to the Navy Department. At the conclusion of the war, he went to Vicksburg, Miss., as the agent of John Swasey & Co., merchants of Cincinnati, for the purchase of cotton for shipment to Northern markets. The prosecution of his business took him to nearly all parts of the state, by rail, steamboat, and horseback, as well as to many of the neighboring states. In the preliminary work preparatory to the adoption of the new state constitution in 1869, and the readmission of Mississippi into the Union, he bore an active part. Oct. 1, 1871, he was called to the head of the Republican Press Association, of Concord, N. H. (publishers of the "Daily Monitor" and the "Independent Statesman"), as its Treasurer and Business Manager. Since holding this position he has three times been elected state printer; and in 1877, a vacancy occurring in the office of State Reporter (reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court), he was appointed to that office by Gov. Prescott. He has made many contributions to current literature, beginning, among magazines, with "The Knickerbocker," while under the editorial control of Charles G. Leland. Poems of his are to be found in some of the finest collections extant, -- notably Bryant's new "Library of Poetry and Song," Dr. Kendrick's "Our Poetical Favorites," and Harpel's "Poets and Poetry of Printerdom." Thomas Allen, b. Nov. 2, 1818; d. Nov. 4, 1875. He was the only child of Thomas Bowen and Abigail W. (Allen) Jenckes. He graduated at Brown University with honor in 1838, and entered the profession of the law, in which he rose rapidly to eminence. Patent law was his legal specialty, and he was employed, during his practice, in many of the most important cases litigated in this country. He occupied many important civil positions. As a member of the General Assembly of his state, he was the controlling mind. At one time he made a remarkable speech, in the case of Hazard and Ives, involving the right of the assembly to revise the judgments of the court so far as to direct a new trial, and carried the assembly against its own previous action. It is recorded as one of the greatest forensic triumphs in the annals of that state. Mr. Jenckes was elected to congress in 1862, and served through the 38th, 39th 40th, and 41st congresses, rendering distinguished service at the head of the committee on patents, and on the judiciary committee. He won national fame in connection with "civil service reform," the general bankrupt law, and the patent and copyright laws. He possessed great courage, both moral and intellectual, with wonderful self-control. It is related by those most nearly connected with him in his profession, that he never lost his temper, nor allowed irritable words to escape his lips. Although often himself traduced, he was a stranger to detraction. He was one of Rhode Island's greatest lawyers and profoundest men. Few equalled him, and none surpassed him. He accomplished, in fifty-seven years, what few men accomplish in four score. He was born for great affairs, but was cut off in the beginning of his fullest powers as a lawyer, a poet, a man of letters, a legislator, and a statesman. He m. Mary Jane Fuller, b. in 1822, and d. Jan. 11, 1872. Ch., Mary Edith, b. March 18, 1844; m. Feb. 19, 1867, William W. Goddard, of Providence. Jeannie Rosalie, b. May 16, 1846; m., Feb., 1872, John R. Bartlett, of Cumberland.
